Urbandale, IA

The workforce is changing.

Our organizations are changing.

The very nature of our work is changing, and the ability to effectively, collaboratively and authentically work together is now more important than ever. This is how we get there...

INFORMATION AND TOOLS YOU CAN USE

This engaging and interactive workshop will provide participants with a deep-dive examination of diversity, inclusion and related topics, and the roles that they play in our work and our lives. Participants will also be introduced to tools for making their work (and other) relationships as authentic, valuable and effective as possible. Each participant receives a workbook packed full of valuable information and tools for applying this information to their personal and professional life.

Topics and themes covered:

- Common myths regarding diversity
- Social Cognition and Cognitive biases
- What diversity really is and what it really means
- Types and dimensions of diversity
- The science of bias, assumption and perception
- Social Networks and Social Network Analysis
- Creating effective and authentic workplace relationships
- Intentional communication

space is limited for these workshops - register today

"You always wonder when you take time away from office to attend a workshop if it will be worth it. Joe's session absolutely was! It is grounded in researched and interspersed with interactive and thought provoking exercises. Joe's presentation made the topic of diversity a relevant, personal and business focused issue. This is the best content I've seen on diversity in recent years."

-Dennis Bole | OD Consultant, HR Development and Research, Principal Financial Group
